

Dpoint has been playing electronic music since the late 80's, and the two members Peter Andersson and Robert Widell has been in the band since the very beginning.

Over time, the band has been exploring many musical styles, from pure experimental electronica to synth pop and screaming guitars! In the Dpoint version of the 21st century, the music moves from ambient melodic pieces to dance floor beats into classic synth pop, everything supported by mind boggling videos projected behind the members, and the band tunes its performances to the crowd, venue and type of concert they are performing at, and also make frequent use of guest musicians and performers.

On Stage

Dpoint prefer a set up using one or two computers, two to four synthesizers and two microphones for lead and backing vocals. Furthermore, one or two projectors with the ability to connect a computer is required if the band is expected to deliver a set including multimedia. Of course, if guest appearances are planned for, additional equipment will have to be managed accordingly.
